Press Release Summary: "The Multi-level marketing industry has been claiming the average person can 'get rich quick' by teaching techniques that were designed instead to insure the companies longevity and the success of its' leaders rather than the success of the every day person," says Barbara Thiel, mlm certified master of the fastest growing live training organization in America for entrepreneurs. "Leaders and companies in this industry have been teaching people to 'work their warm market', 'the 3-foot rule' and techniques that are the actions of an employee or a sales force rather than as an owner or distributor of a product or a service, for more than 50 years. The failure rate in this industry is more than 90% and it's because people are taught how to build someone else's business, not their own." In fact, almost 8,000 people per day are enticed to join a Network Marketing program in the U.S. alone. At an average cost of $300, that is $2.4 million dollars per day, 90% of which will never be recovered!
