Not all drug rehabilitation programs can say that they have the highest success rate of graduates staying off of drugs permanently. And not all drug and alcohol rehabilitation centers can say that they do more than help people recover, they also give back to the community through education and prevention. You cannot win the battle against substance abuse if you don't have the tools necessary to fight in the first place.

Mesa, AZ July 10, 2009/Press Release/For drug rehabilitation to be completely effective there has to be more than telling a person that the need to quit abusing drugs and alcohol. There has to be a hands approach that delves into the real issues that cause a person to alter their whole life just to find solace in a bottle of alcohol or baggy of drugs. The hands on approach cannot just come from within the walls of a drug treatment facility; it has to start in the streets, in the schools, and in the homes of every person on the planet. Drug and alcohol abuse doesn't just affect the environment that an addict lives in, it affects each person that the addict encounters, it affects the work that is to be done, it affects the children that have to live with it, and learn from it. Through education, you can stop drug and alcohol addiction before it starts. Through education you can teach the children of addicts to break the cycle. Through education you can change the world.

Since the inception of the narconon program the goal is been to educate not only current and former addicts about the dangers of substance abuse, but people in the communities that we all live in and in the communities where the drug trade hits the hardest. The Narconon program is not only in the U.S. The Narconon program has been able to educate people in over 40 countries in places like Columbia, Ukraine, Philippines, and even Iran. Each are benefitting from the education they receive and the activities they become part of. Narconon is actively involved with the organizing and hosting of sporting events all over the world. From the Narconon Miracles hockey team, to golf tournaments, marathons, and even celebrity softball games, the message is clear. Involvement with community, schools, and activities keeps kids off of drugs and away from alcohol. Giving people the right tools at the beginning will create success at the end.
