Each year, the mouse family that lives in the wall in the big house looks forward to the holiday season. This is a special time of year for them. They decorate their home from top to bottom – even the hole in the wall gets trimmed out beautifully. After all, that hole is the door to the family home and they want it to be lovely to look at as well as welcoming. The fact is, when the weather is cold outside it is not unusual for homeless mouse or two to wander into the big house, looking for warmth and comfort.

Marty, one of the younger mice children, especially loves it when they have guests in their home. You see Marty is full of adventure and he sneaks out into the big house at every chance. He cannot wait to get big enough to go out alone into the real world. He wants to know what's out there. So when a mouse that has been on the outside pays a visit Marty is thrilled. This is another opportunity to learn about the world that exists outside of the big house.

The only thing that compares to Marty's love of adventure is his love for Christmas and all that goes with it. Marty believes that Santa Claus is the nicest person in the world. That's why the little white mouse is so careful when he writes his Santa letter. He wants Santa to like him and keep him on Santa's Nice List. Every year Marty looks forward to receiving personalized letters from santa, and this year is no different.

Tonight is the big night for this little mouse family. They are going to decorate their Christmas tree and then the children will write their Santa letters. Marty's father brought home a real tree this year. It seems that the family of the big house decided to do a little trimming on their tree before they brought in to decorate. Marty's father found a small tip of a branch that was cut off which made the perfect Christmas tree for the mouse family. The tree was huge!

Marty was proud as could be to contribute all sorts of decorations. On a recent visit to the big house he had met a little girl named Hailei Corin, mailing out a santa letter. She was very nice and she gave Marty lots of great stuff to take back to his mouse house. Marty found that she had provided glitter, colorful bits of thread and ribbon, and buttons. Those items were the perfect trimmings for the mouse family's Christmas tree. He just knew that story would insure that he would receive letters from santa each and every year!
