Bruntwood, the North of England commercial property company, has announced that it is to open up a new floor of serviced office space at Manchester's Centurion House on Deansgate. This will take its serviced office portfolio to over 1800 desks across Manchester, Liverpool, Leeds and Birmingham.

The new suites will provide additional cost efficient office space for small to medium sized businesses who want to be located on Deansgate, a high profile location right in the heart of the Manchester city centre. Customers in the newly developed space will also benefit from contemporary communal areas, onsite meeting rooms and a dedicated customer service team.

The building on Deansgate is owned and managed by Bruntwood and combines two floors of serviced office space alongside nine floors of conventional office space and ground floor meeting rooms.

Andrew Butterworth, Bruntwood's Sales Director commented; "Demand for our serviced offices has always been strong. Our fully integrated office buildings where our serviced and conventional office customers work side by side have proven very successful, particularly in the current climate. This is because we can offer customers the ability to take short term serviced office space and then move into longer term conventional offices within the same building."

The new serviced office suites will be available for occupation from May and the suites will be available to view from April.

Bruntwood currently proactively own and manage 90 properties across the cities of Manchester, Liverpool, Leeds and Birmingham, which are home to over 1,000 companies.
