The developers of desktop video downloader and converter FVD Suite have announced the release of a brand-new updated version of their software – FVD Suite 2.4.5. The program allowing users do download videos from well over 200 video sharing websites including YouTube, DailyMotion and others and to convert them into the most popular media formats is really simple and 100% free to use. It can already be downloaded without any charges from the company's site at FlashVideoDownloader.org.

The new version of FVD Suite features added Firefox and Internet Explorer extensions (read more), RAM optimization and allows the user to download video straight from the browser window. Due to these updates the program works even faster now providing the surfers with the opportunity to download their preferred vids and to convert them into required media formats (both video and audio ones) in mere seconds.

Freshly added "Play" feature offers the users of FVD Suite to enjoy the downloaded video immediately after the download without having to navigate all the way to the target folder. Simply click the Play button and the chosen download will open in your default media player straight away. Moreover, the users won't have to switch between different windows any longer as there is a search tab added right into the main window of FVD Suite 2.4.5. Due to this, a Web surfer can search videos directly from FVD Suite without having to use the browser at all.

The list of other significant updates also includes the following:

- Added new video modes in converter
- Added social gadgets in status bar
- UI improvements
- A bunch of bugs and errors fixed.

With all these new additions FVD Suite 2.4.5 is very likely to become the leader in the market, which is only stimulated by the fact that this software is distributed absolutely for free. The expanding popularity of the program among the users is easily observable – and the developers of FVD Suite are surely making it grow even bigger by satisfying all possible needs of their customers with regularly updated versions of their software.
